Excerpt: .the fifth or sixth grade, and in the sixth grade we may assume that boys are capable of beginning the use of woodworking tools. One should guard against the dissipation of energy in the grammar grades too often caused by introducing too many media of expression. We must remember that our work is tending toward definite and fixed useful hand processes; and the old motto, -- A thing worth doing at all is worth doing well --applies to boys and girls from eleven or twelve to fifteen or sixteen years of age. In the upper two grades of the grammar school, sewing, cooking and applied art work for the girls; bench woodwork and art metal work, together with mechanical drawing, for the boys, seem nearly to complete the manual training teacher s field of possibilities. There is so much in the state courses of study...
