As some wild roadside flower on summer day Nods thru the pasture bars and smiles again, But catches not a glance from busy men, On bauble each of wealth or fame intent - Until some blithesome maiden tripping by, With nature-loving eyes the flower doth spy, And knows its simple grace for her was meant, Then plucks it for her belt in glad content: - So thou, my little book, at last shalt win Some loving readers, to myself akin, And be the link which draws those souls to me, On that fair star where we at last shall be.
