In devotion to our characteristic American ideals, liberty of the individual and equality of opportunity for all, in industry and in education, at work and at play, our people are united. Northern capital builds Southern mills and Southern men sell the products to Northern consumers. Northern money aids in founding Southern schools, and Southern boys and girls go to Northern colleges. We visit back and forth in happy friendly relations. Our sons and daughters intermarry, the more freely, apparently, because their grandfathers tried to kill each other. National feeling is certainly as strong in the South as it is in the North, only with the difference that in the South it is usually a little more Openly and...
