Excerpt: .and martial ardor, are followed by that which bears his inanimate body. Three nations lower their grateful flags above his tomb. In withdrawing him for a few hours from the anxieties of his command and the din of arms, Providence gave him what he had no doubt entreated of it, --time to humiliate his heart. This great general was a humble and fervent Christian. France loves heroism. The imperialists will not be alone in celebrating Marshal de Saint-Arnaud. Legitimists, Orleanists, republicans, will forget the minister of the Coup d Etat of December to remember only the commander-in-chief of the army of the Orient, the victor of the Alma, the man whose shroud was a triumphant flag. CHAPTER XXIV SEBASTOPOL OEBASTOPOL! It is the name which for more than a year will resound throughout the world. Sebastopol! It is the city whose siege will be...
